Supply Chain Digital Health Innovation Grant Opportunity in Ghana and Uganda

KEYWORDS FOR TECHNICAL EXPERTISE NEEDED

digital health, digital innovation, innovators, family planning, supply chain, e-commerce, digital platforms, B2B, B2C, sustainability, online, pharmacies, health outcomes, seed funding, consumer access

The Local Health System Sustainability (LHSS) project is looking to provide grants and technical assistance to digital innovators in Ghana and Uganda to support their business platform with a future vision of business growth and health impact. The award will focus on opportunities to expand access to family planning commodities specifically, and where opportunities exist, essential health commodities generally. The grantees should be firms that have successfully launched promising digital platforms, but that have not yet realized scale and may be limited in reaching consumers, particularly reaching women of reproductive age with family planning commodities.

The specific objectives of this grant are as follows:

- For digital health supply chain innovators, provide technical support that increases consumer access and/or demand for family planning products, services and information.
- For digital health supply chain innovators, provide seed funding that allows for development of new digital products or platforms or improvements to existing digital solutions.

Eligibility requirements

- Public or mixed private-public entities are not eligible;
- Be legally operating in Ghana or Uganda (registration documents required);
- Provide evidence of financial accountability to the extent possible and as appropriate to the grant type being awarded, maintain strict and detailed records of all expenses, and have designated individual(s) responsible for financial management; and
- Be in good standing with all civil and fiscal authorities in the countries they operate in.
